

Learn 24 Reasons to Study Abroad

Description

Not that you need an excuse to go to a distant nation to get a world-class education, but if you're still not convinced, here's our list of 25 reasons to study abroad.

And, for those who have already studied abroad, please let us know if you have any other good reasons to study abroad and whether you agree with the list thus far!

1. It will look nice on your resume.

Employers value international living experience since it demonstrates that you have dealt with individuals from other cultures and have more extraordinary adaptability.

You're doing fairly well if you can go to a new place while learning skills for a solid graduate job.

2. Practice your linguistic skills

Do you recall the foreign languages you learned in school? No, neither do I. Studying abroad might refresh them; you might be surprised at how much you recall. Additional language classes while traveling can also be a terrific opportunity to meet new people.

3. Living in a foreign nation differs from going on a vacation.

You'll actually experience your study location over time, learning things like where to get the most excellent coffee, what tourist traps to avoid, and how to make the most of your new city.

4. Meet a broad spectrum of people

Exposure to various individuals will not only help you develop your people skills but also provide you with a more in-depth understanding of others, particularly those from diverse cultures.

5. Make friends for life

You may not like everyone you meet, but odds are you'll make at least one lasting friend (assuming you're good at staying in touch). A shared international study experience is an excellent way to bond with classmates.

6. Experiment with new and fascinating meals.

7. Study and learn in new ways.

Those studying abroad are frequently exposed to a whole new method of instruction. This can be not very comforting, but it will also expose you to new ways of learning.

8. Obtain independence

Studying and living abroad challenges you to be self-sufficient, away from the security of your home comforts. Consider this a fresh and fascinating challenge (rather than something terrifying).

9. Develop self-reliance

Moving abroad is the ultimate test of independence. When (or if) you return, you will most likely rely less on others and take more responsibility for yourself.

10. You will have a better understanding of diverse cultures.

Cultural sensitivity isn't just something politicians are accused of lacking; it's also something you can learn when studying abroad!

11. Take a fresh look at your own culture.

Living in another nation might assist inform your point of view on your home culture, allowing you to build your own opinions rather than merely accepting those determined by where you happen to originate from.

12. Discover more about yourself

Throwing yourself into a whole new situation will assist you in determining your strengths and weaknesses. These foundations can be built upon during your study abroad experience.

13. Grow into an adult

Leap into the unknown to accelerate the shift from adolescent to adult. You'll have to fend for yourself, purchase your own food, and do your own laundry, but it will all be worthwhile.

14. Acquire life experience

Gaining life experience is one of the most important reasons to study abroad. You'll learn how to manage your life and fit it into one suitcase, deal with unexpected situations, and be independent and self-sufficient.

15. Be spontaneous and daring.

Spontaneity and adventure are your closest friends when you're hundreds of miles away from home. Open your mind to new experiences and sights; fun will find you.

16. You learn to value the little things more.

When you study abroad, you usually have fewer possessions than the average student. Being so far away from home might make you crave the familiar comforts you'd taken for granted.

Welcome to a newfound appreciation for everything from your folks' cooking to owning more than two pairs of shoes.

17. Develop a global mindset

You'll be able to utilize your new global mindset to back up arguments, educate your convictions, and guide your future, whether at a job, school, or play.

18. Take advantage of international student discounts

Student discounts are usually entertaining, but they're much more so when buying at a new store using strange-looking money!

(Warning: do not spend it all at once.) It's an unforgettable experience.

Even if your friends back home get tired of hearing about it (warning: they will), your study abroad experience will stick with you for a long time.

19. It's an unforgettable experience.

Even if your friends back home get tired of hearing about it (warning: they will), your study abroad experience will stick with you for a long time.

20. You'll value your home and family more.

Any memory of parental squabbles or sibling rivalry will be dwarfed by your memories of how lovely they are.

Likewise, they'll have time to forget about all your less appealing characteristics...

When you return, these relationships will appear to be much stronger!

21. Funding for international students is becoming increasingly widespread.

Studying abroad does not have to leave you broke, as an increasing number of institutions and governmental entities provide specific scholarships to international students. See this website to find international scholarships from all across the world.

22. Benefit from decreased tuition fees.

This, of course, depends on where you study abroad. Still, in many places in continental Europe, Asia, and Latin America, you may look at a highly regarded university without incurring too much debt.

23. In your spare time, go exploring.

Studying abroad should give you plenty of time to explore between lectures and lab sessions. Whether you enjoy seeing famous landmarks, sampling new foods, or haggling at local markets, there is always a better way to spend your time than reading through Facebook!

24. Expand your worldwide job opportunities

While you can always return home at the end of your overseas student program, many students want to stay and apply for a work visa.

Even if you return home or seek employment elsewhere, the foreign experience gained through study abroad is likely to be valued by employers. Because, as the saying goes, “variety is the spice of life.”

Your father may remark it when you choose a different flavor of chips at the store, but it’s true: change, variety, and new experiences make life worthwhile.

Study abroad to shake things up a little.
