

Learn What to Look for When Choosing a Maid Service

Description

In 1965, the average married woman would have spent 32 hours per week doing housekeeping. Now 50 years later, the average American (man or woman) spends only 6 hours each week cleaning their home.

That is all the time many families have to devote to cleaning. As a result, House cleaning is frequently left on the backburner between full-time jobs, caring for children and pets, and finding time to unwind.

If this is your situation, it may be time to consider hiring a professional house cleaning service. Then, instead of spending your nights and weekends dusting and mopping, you may spend your time doing activities you genuinely enjoy.

But, before you search for “home cleaner service near me,” you should know what to look for. After all, you wouldn’t want to welcome just anyone into your home!

Continue reading to learn about the most crucial factors to consider when hiring house cleaning services.

How to Know You’ve Found a Good Maid Service.

The average person will devote 61 days of their life to vacuuming and 69 days to bathroom cleaning. Wouldn’t you rather spend those 130 days with your family, spending quality time together?

Use the recommendations below to select a trustworthy house cleaning service that will free up your time and take care of the “dirty work.”

Stellar Reviews & Reputation

Begin your search by asking family and friends for recommendations. For example, which house cleaning service do they employ? Are they satisfied with their work?

Reviews and testimonials are the next best thing to personal recommendations. Check Google, Yelp, the Better Business Bureau, and other local review sites in your area. Don’t just rely on testimonials from the company’s website; look into third-party review sites as well.

When researching different cleaning services, look for reviews that are complimentary about them:

- Trustworthiness
- Professionalism
- Punctuality
- Availability
- Work ethic
- Cleaning skills

There is no such thing as a flawless firm, but you should notice a broad pattern of favorable feedback. Keep in mind that one poor review from a dissatisfied client isn’t always enough to down the entire organization.

Another sign of an excellent cleaning service contributes to the community.

Excellent Communication Skills

It would be best to have a good rapport with the house cleaning from the first email or phone conversation. Before discussing prices or scheduling a walk-through, use the initial contact to acquire a sense of their company.

Make a list of questions you want to ask, such as:

How do you determine your charges (by service, hourly, or fixed fee)?

Is your business bonded and insured?

How long have you been in operation?

Do you conduct criminal background checks on your employees?

What cleaning supplies do you use (and who provides them)?

Who will visit my home, and how will they gain access to it?

What should I do with my animals?

Please take note of not only their responses but also how they communicate. Do they appear warm, welcoming, and genuine? Will you feel at ease giving this person the key to your house?

Fully Bonded & Insured

What if someone is hurt while cleaning your house? What if something you own is damaged, broken, or disappears?

If you choose a cleaning service that is not insured and bonded, you will have no legal recourse if something goes wrong. A good business will not only have these but will gladly provide proof upon request.

A Variety of Service Offerings

Do you require regular maintenance cleaning once a week or a few times a month? Do you need a more thorough deep cleaning in the spring or before a move?

Make sure you know exactly what services you need before you start making calls. The best cleaning companies will offer a variety of options that you can tailor to the demands of your home and family.

Employees vs. Independent Workers

It is crucial to recognize that many cleaning companies do not screen or do background checks on their personnel before hiring. Others are more lenient in their hiring practices and may allow a worker to bring a friend/cousin/neighbor to work with them.

The truth is that when you employ independent cleaners, you never know what you're going to receive. You don't know whom you're admitting into your home (or whom they might bring with them). There's no assurance you'll get the same cleaners or the same level of service each time.

Look for a house cleaning business that performs rigorous screenings and background checks on all of its employees. Otherwise, it's not worth the risk!

Always Go with Your Gut.

Your goal in hiring a maid service is to give you back:

- Your Time
- Your Energy
- Your Peace of mind

If you don't have complete faith that the organization you're considering will provide these things, you should keep exploring. Continue to ask questions until you are delighted. Be open and honest about your requirements, and pay close attention to the responses.

What if anything feels "weird" or you're not at ease? Trust your instincts and proceed to the next company on your list.

Do You Need a House Cleaning Service?

You wouldn't give your healthcare to just any doctor you discovered in the phone book, and you shouldn't entrust your home to just any house cleaning service.

Check to see if the company you're thinking about has a strong reputation and decent communication abilities. They should be bonded and insured, and they should provide a wide range of cleaning services—the best house cleaning services screen and hire their employees as well.

Remember always to trust your instincts while looking for the best house cleaning service for you! You'll be well on your way to a gleaming clean home if you follow these tips.
